INSTRUCTION:

- This task must be completed as a group consisting of 3 members recommended, maximum 4 members only.
- Your team is assigned to analyze the problem, propose improvements, and develop a responsive homepage prototype that can be viewed in a web browser.
- The following tasks must be completed by your group in order to fulfill the needs and expectations of the business owner.
- Your group is required to provide clear, organized, and verifiable evidence for each task to demonstrate that the instructions have been properly implemented.
- All evidence must be documented and submitted together with the final deliverables. Failure to provide sufficient proof of process may result in mark deduction.
- Read the given scenario and follow the task instruction. Please refer to the attached RUBRIC for the MARKING SCHEME carefully.

SCENARIO BACKGROUND:

Many small and medium businesses in Malaysia rely on websites to promote their products and services to customers. However, some websites were developed several years ago and may not follow modern web design practices, resulting in poor usability and inconsistent user experience.

Recently, a local business or organization has identified several issues with its existing website. Feedback from users indicates that the website is not optimized for mobile devices, the page layout appears inconsistent, and the navigation structure is difficult to understand. In addition, some visual elements such as images, text sections, and content blocks are not properly aligned, which affects the overall professionalism of the website.

To address these issues, the business owner has decided to collaborate with a Junior Web Development Team (your group) to evaluate and improve the website interface. Your team has been assigned to conduct a website analysis, identify usability and layout problems, and propose improvements based on modern web development practices.

As part of the project, your team must design and develop a responsive homepage prototype using HTML, CSS, and the Bootstrap framework. The redesigned homepage should demonstrate proper layout structure, improved navigation, and responsive behaviour across multiple devices.

The client expects the redesigned homepage to meet the following requirements:

- The website must be fully responsive and accessible on desktop, tablet, and mobile devices.
- The layout should use a structured grid system to ensure proper alignment and consistency.
- The navigation menu should be clear, organized, and mobile-friendly.
- The interface design should appear modern, clean, and professional.
- The website must load correctly and display properly in a web browser environment.
- The implementation should utilize a web framework (Bootstrap) to support efficient development and maintain design consistency.

Your team is responsible for analysing the selected website, proposing design improvements, and developing a responsive homepage prototype that demonstrates the effective use of web development technologies.

Evaluation Criteria

- Refer to the rubric provided in the appendix for detailed scoring components.

Evaluation of Website Layout on Desktop, Tablet, and Mobile View

Desktop View :

In desktop view, the website appears to provide a broad content structure with multiple navigation options and several informational blocks on the homepage. The layout is content-rich and suitable for institutional users who need access to different sections quickly, such as business services, government-related content, employee resources, and data hubs. The homepage also displays major national productivity targets and current indicators, which strengthens its informational function.
However, the desktop structure also appears somewhat crowded because the navigation items are repeated multiple times in the page structure. This suggests possible redundancy in the layout or duplicated menu components, which may reduce visual clarity and make the homepage feel less streamlined.

Tablet View :

For tablet view, the website is likely to remain usable because its content is arranged in sections rather than in one long block of plain text. This is helpful for medium-sized screens. Nevertheless, the large number of menu options and repeated navigation structures may cause the interface to feel dense on a tablet, especially if spacing and grouping are not carefully controlled. A tablet user may need more scrolling and may find the header or menu area visually heavy. This inference is based on the amount of repeated navigational content visible in the homepage structure.

Mobile View :

In mobile view, the website may face greater responsiveness challenges because the homepage contains many menu items, social media links, statistical highlights, contact details, services, resources, and quick links in one page structure. On a small screen, this may create long scrolling, reduced readability, and weaker prioritisation of important content. If menu sections are not properly collapsed or simplified for mobile, users may struggle to navigate efficiently. The homepage content suggests that mobile optimisation is especially important for this site.

Identify a minimum of five (5) strengths and weakness of the website

Strengths

1. Clear Organizational Hierarchy
2. Professional Visual Branding
3. Responsive Design Tools
4. Clear Navigation Menu
5. Direct Contact Integration

Weaknesses

1. Inefficient Resource Management:
2. Resource Loading Failures (ERR_BLOCKED_BY_CLIENT)
3. Inefficient Error Handling
4. Potential Privacy/Security Warnings
5. Layout Padding Issues

Each strength and weakness must be clearly described and supported with a detailed explanation :

Strengths

1. Clear Organizational Hierarchy:

   The page uses a distinct layout to introduce leadership. By placing the Director General at the top center with a larger profile, the website effectively communicates the organizational structure and authority levels at a glance.

2. Professional Visual Branding:

   The use of high-quality, formal portraits with consistent red-and-white geometric backgrounds creates a unified corporate identity. This professionalism is essential for a government-linked body to build trust with its stakeholders.

3. Responsive Design Tools:

   The top toolbar indicates the site is being viewed in a responsive "Mobile-First" inspection mode. This suggests the site is designed to adapt to different screen sizes (tablets, phones, and desktops), ensuring accessibility for users on various devices.

4. Clear Navigation Menu:

   The header contains a well-organized, multi-category navigation bar (e.g., "About MPC," "For Business," "Data Hub"). This allows users to quickly find specific information without needing to dig through deep sub-menus.

5. Direct Contact Integration:

   Visible social media icons (Facebook, Instagram, YouTube) and a "Contact Us" link in the header provide easy channels for engagement. This transparency makes the organization feel more reachable to the public.

Weaknesses

1. Inefficient Resource Management:

   The repetitive nature of the console errors suggests that the site is trying to call resources that don't exist multiple times. This can slow down the page's "Time to Interactive," causing a sluggish experience for users on slower internet connections.

2. Resource Loading Failures (ERR_BLOCKED_BY_CLIENT):

   Multiple resources (like Firebase logging and performance metrics) are failing to load. While this can sometimes be caused by ad-blockers, it often points to misconfigured tracking or security scripts that clutter the backend and could slow down site performance.

3. Inefficient Error Handling:

   The repeated "Error while trying to report Vitals to BI" messages suggest that the site’s analytical tracking is failing. If the site cannot report its own performance data, the administrators won't know if real users are experiencing lag or crashes.

4. Potential Privacy/Security Warnings:

   The console displays a high number of errors (17) and warnings (8). A high volume of unresolved console errors can sometimes be a red flag for vulnerabilities or poor maintenance, which might deter tech-savvy users from trusting the site with sensitive data.

5. Layout Padding Issues:

   In the main view, the portraits of the management team appear somewhat cramped within their red-and-white graphic frames. Better whitespace management would improve readability and make the "Board of Management" section feel less cluttered and more modern.

Explains issues related to HTML structure, CSS styling and responsiveness

1. Structural Issues

One noticeable structural issue is the apparent duplication of navigation elements. The homepage text shows the same main menu items repeated several times, including Home, About MPC, For Business, For Government, For Employee, Data Hub, and Knowledge Hub. This may indicate repeated header/menu code, unnecessary nested structures, or poor semantic organisation. Such duplication can affect maintainability and may confuse assistive technologies or screen readers.
Another structural concern is that the homepage contains a large variety of information types all together, including organisation profile, productivity targets, current indicators, services, resources, quick links, contact details, and social media. While this is informative, the information hierarchy could be improved so that users can distinguish primary content from secondary content more easily.

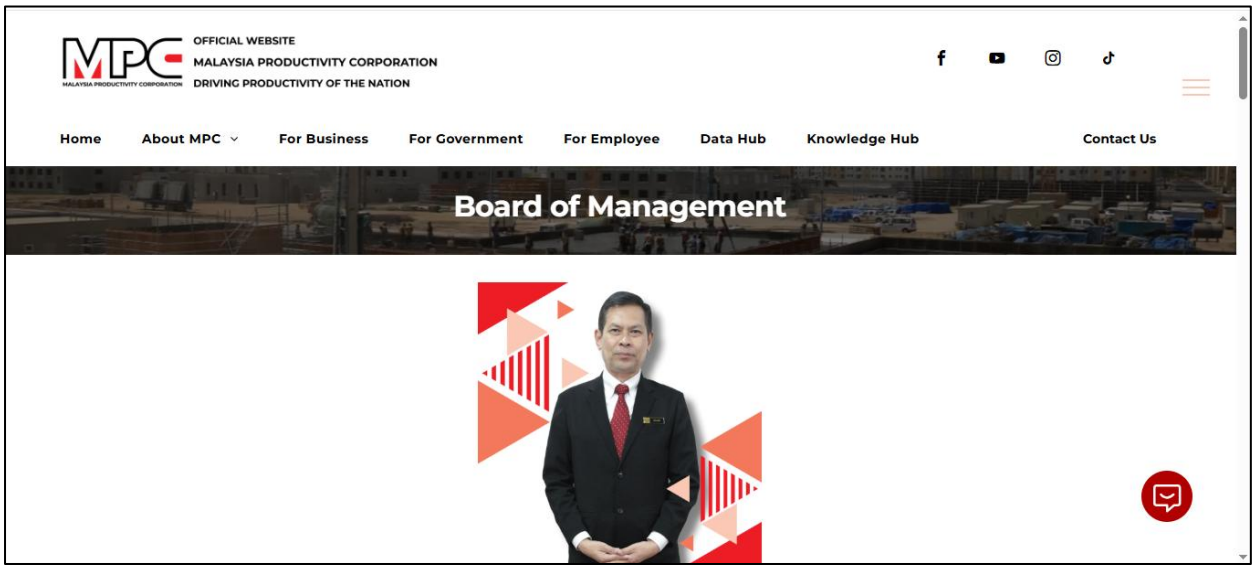
2. Styling Issues

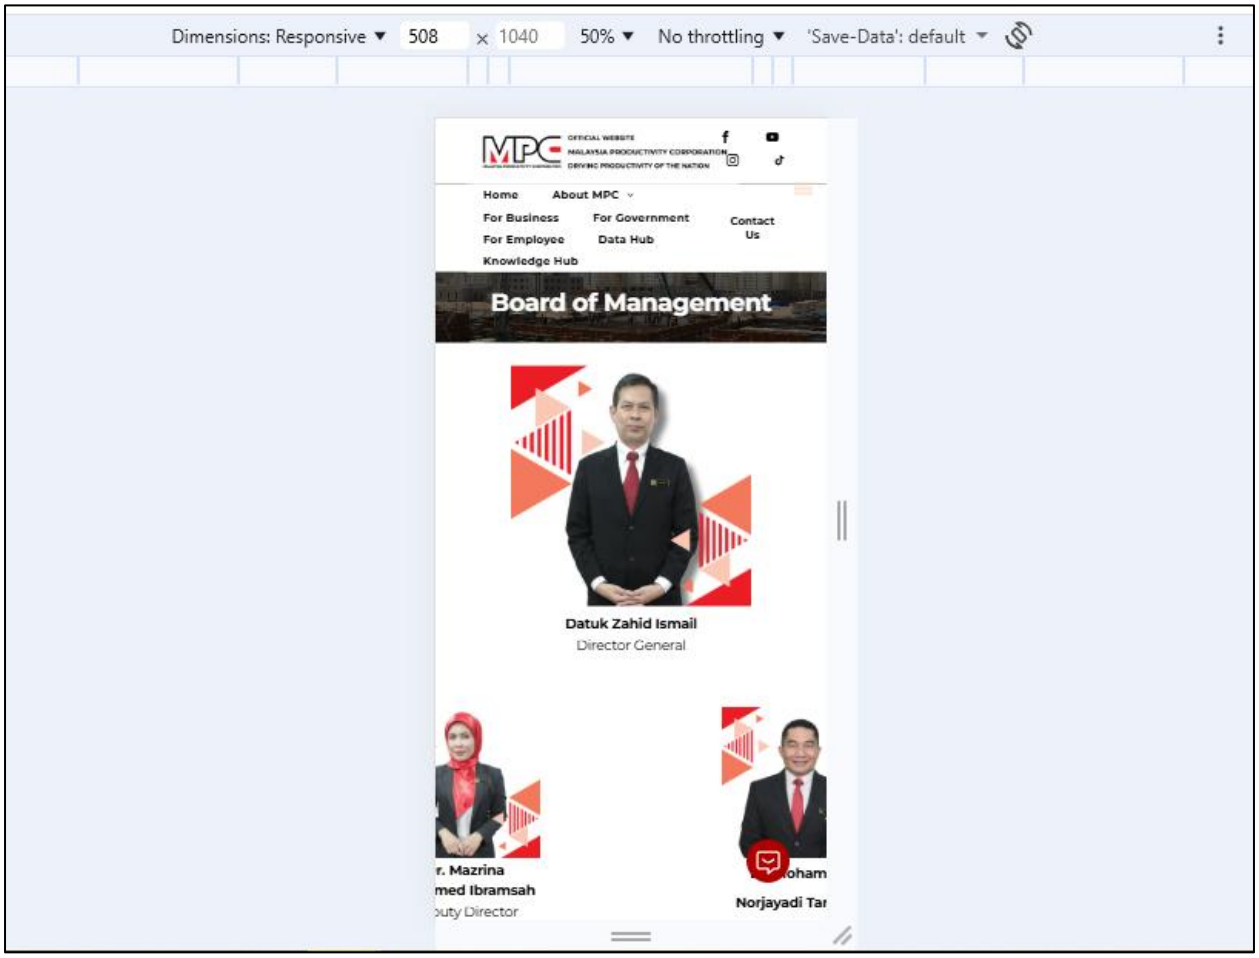
From the available homepage structure, the site appears to emphasise information delivery more than visual simplicity. The large amount of content on the homepage may create a visually busy impression if spacing, typography, and contrast are not consistently managed. A government or institutional website should ideally present information in a cleaner and more balanced visual hierarchy so that users can scan the page quickly. The presence of many links, repeated navigation blocks, and multiple footer-style sections may reduce stylistic consistency.

3. Responsiveness Issues

The most likely responsiveness issue is content density across smaller screens. Since the homepage includes many categories and several information clusters, a poorly optimised responsive layout may lead to text compression, excessive vertical scrolling, and inconsistent spacing on mobile devices. Repeated menus may also occupy too much screen space on tablet and mobile views. In responsive web design, content should adapt by collapsing menus, prioritising key actions, and maintaining readable spacing across breakpoints. The current homepage structure suggests that responsiveness should be a key area for improvement.

Screenshots of desktop and mobile testing





Proposed Improvements

Improvement 1: Reduce Navigation Duplication

The website should remove repeated menu structures and keep only one clear main navigation area. This will improve clarity, reduce code redundancy, and strengthen accessibility.

Improvement 2: Improve Content Hierarchy

The homepage should prioritise the most important information first, such as major services and key calls to action. Secondary items such as quick links, extra resources, and social media can be placed lower on the page or grouped more neatly.

Improvement 3: Enhance Mobile Responsiveness

For mobile view, the menu should be collapsed into a simple hamburger navigation. Large information blocks should be stacked clearly with enough spacing, larger tap targets, and shorter text sections.

Improvement 4: Strengthen Visual Consistency

The website should apply more consistent spacing, font hierarchy, and section styling. This will make the homepage look more professional, modern, and user-friendly.

Improvement 5: Use Better Semantic Web Structure

The HTML should use proper semantic tags and avoid unnecessary repetition. This improves accessibility, SEO, and long-term maintenance of the website.

Our History (1966 – 2025)

1966 – Birth of the Productivity Movement

The Malaysia Productivity Corporation (MPC) began its journey in 1966 as the National Productivity Centre (NPC) under the Ministry of Trade and Industry. Its mission was clear yet ambitious: to spearhead a national productivity movement that would support Malaysia's transition from an agriculture-based economy into a competitive, industrialising nation.

1970s – Laying the Foundations

In its formative years, NPC concentrated on productivity-awareness campaigns, training, and the introduction of quality circles in workplaces. These initiatives created the foundation for industries and public agencies in Malaysia to adopt continuous improvement as a way of working.

1980s – Quality and Standards

During the 1980s, MPC pioneered the spread of Quality Management Systems and standardisation in Malaysia. It championed the adoption of Kaizen, ISO standards, and Total Quality Management (TQM), embedding productivity and quality improvement into daily management practices.

1990s – Strengthening Competitiveness

As the economy expanded, MPC was rebranded as the Malaysia Productivity Corporation (MPC) in 1991. The focus shifted towards competitiveness, innovation, and benchmarking against international best practice. MPC deepened collaboration with industry associations and global organisations such as the Asian Productivity Organisation (APO).

2000s – Public Sector Excellence

The new millennium saw MPC take a stronger role in public sector transformation. It introduced Good Regulatory Practice (GRP) and Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) to improve the quality of policymaking and regulatory design. MPC also supported MS ISO 9000 certification across government agencies, setting new benchmarks for efficiency and service delivery.

2010s – Digital Transition and Business Productivity

With digital technologies reshaping industries, MPC launched programmes to support firms in embracing Industry 4.0, reducing compliance costs, and enhancing the ease of doing business. The creation of the Productivity Nexus provided collaborative platforms that brought together businesses, experts, and government to address sector-specific challenges.

2020s – Reform, Resilience, and Innovation

The COVID-19 pandemic underscored the need for agility and resilience. MPC responded by advancing remote auditing, digital adoption, and regulatory flexibility. From 2021 onwards, MPC took on a pivotal role in implementing the National Policy on Good Regulatory Practice, contributing to the Ekonomi MAGANI framework, and driving the Agenda Reformasi Perkhidmatan Awam (ARPA).

2025 – Leading National Productivity Transformation

By 2025, MPC stands as the nation's navigator of productivity and competitiveness. With over five decades of impact, MPC now champions reforms that aim for a 3.8% annual labour productivity growth throughout the 13th Malaysia Plan (2026–2030), while positioning Malaysia among the top 12 most competitive economies globally by 2030.

From a modest centre in 1966 to a leading national institution in 2025, MPC's journey reflects Malaysia's own transformation — bold, resilient, and forward-looking.

Our History (1966 – 2025)

1966 – Birth of the Productivity Movement

The Malaysia Productivity Corporation (MPC) began its journey in 1966 as the National Productivity Centre (NPC) under the Ministry of Trade and Industry. Its mission was clear yet ambitious: to spearhead a national productivity movement that would support Malaysia's transition from an agriculture-based economy into a competitive, industrialising nation.

1970s – Laying the Foundations

In its formative years, NPC concentrated on productivity awareness campaigns, training, and the introduction of quality circles in workplaces. These initiatives created the foundation for industries and public agencies in Malaysia to adopt continuous improvement as a way of working.

1980s – Quality and Standards

During the 1980s, NPC pioneered the spread of Quality Management Systems and standardisation in Malaysia. It championed the adoption of Kaizen, ISO standards, and Total Quality Management (TQM), embedding productivity and quality improvement into daily management practices.

1990s – Strengthening Competitiveness

As the economy expanded, NPC was rebranded as the Malaysia Productivity Corporation (MPC) in 1991. The focus shifted towards competitiveness, innovation, and benchmarking against international best practice. MPC deepened collaboration with industry associations and global organisations such as the Asian Productivity Organisation (APO).

3. Group reflection

Through this project, our group gained practical experience in analysing and redesigning a website using HTML, CSS, and the Bootstrap framework. We learned how to identify layout, styling, and responsiveness issues that affect user experience. By analysing the existing website, we were able to identify several weaknesses such as crowded layout, unclear navigation, and limited mobile optimisation. We then proposed improvements and redesigned a part of website to make it more modern, organised, and user friendly. By applying the Bootstrap grid system and components, we were able to create a more structured and responsive homepage that works across desktop, tablet, and mobile devices.

The project also helped us understand the importance of clear navigation, proper content hierarchy, and consistent design. In addition, working in a group improved our teamwork, communication, and problem solving skills as we collaborated to complete each task. Overall, this case study enhanced our knowledge of modern web design practices and gave us valuable hands-on experience in improving and building a responsive website.
